

Randy Aliment is a partner in the Seattle office of Lewis Brisbois and serves as General Counsel for the Northwest Commission on Colleges and Universities. Randy has a broad-based practice focused on the higher education and sports industries. He regularly conducts internal investigations for universities in anticipation of potential government or other legal exposure including, most recently, a football student athlete death at an institution in Kansas. He has represented universities in arbitrations related to admissions, governance, and their relationships with teaching locations and partner institutions outside of the U.S. Randy has extensive experience representing foreign clients in US litigation and overseeing foreign litigation and commercial transactions for U.S. clients in China, Japan, Canada, Europe, and the Middle East. He is a Foreign Consultant to Duan & Duan, the first privately licensed Chinese law firm, with offices in several cities in China.
